QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Is a movant entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law when, contrary to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, the non-movant submits no evidence whatsoever in support of an essential element of its claim, and as to which it bears the burden of proof, but relies solely on unsupported allegations in its pleadings?

2. When the non-movant opposes a summary judgment motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 by mere allegations in pleadings unsupported by any evidence, may the evidentiary burden of proof in connection with an element of the non-movant's case be shifted to the movant, thus charging such party with the obligation to negate the non-movant's allegations?

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

Arthur Young & Company ("Arthur Young") petitions this Court for a Writ of Certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, reported at 823 F.2d 888 (5th Cir. 1987), is set forth in the Appendix ("A.___") at A.1a to A.19a. The order denying Arthur Young's petition for rehearing is set forth in the Appendix at A.20a.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on August 11, 1987. A timely petition for rehearing was denied by that court on October 22, 1987. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254 (1).

STATUTE INVOLVED

Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in relevant part provides:

> (b) For Defending Party. A party against whom a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim is asserted or a declaratory judgment is sought may, at any time, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in his favor as to all or any part thereof.
> (c) Motion and Proceedings Thereon. . . . The adverse party prior to the day of hearing may serve opposing affidavits. The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. . . .
>
> (e) Form of Affidavits; Further Testimony; Defense Required. Supporting and opposing affidavits shall be made on personal knowledge, shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence, and shall show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein. Sworn or certified copies of all papers or parts thereof referred to in an affidavit shall be attached thereto or served therewith. The court may permit affidavits to be supplemented or opposed by depositions, answers to interrogatories, or further affidavits. When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but his response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I.

THE PARTIES AND THE COMPLAINT

The Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company ("BNO") seeks recovery of funds it loaned to Monco Agency, Inc. ("Monco") in November, 1981 and January, 1982. To secure payment of the loans, Monco pledged stock in its wholly-owned subsidiary, Cotton Belt Insurance Company ("CBIC"). The loans went into default shortly thereafter in March, 1982 as a result of CBIC's financial problems. Petitioner Arthur Young was the independent auditor of Monco's annual financial statements.

On July 1, 1982 BNO filed suit in the Eastern District of Louisiana against Monco and its president and principal shareholder, Oliver S. Montagnet, Jr. ("Montagnet") alleging violations of both the federal securities laws and the Louisiana Blue Sky Law. BNO alleged that Monco and Montagnet made fraudulent misstatements and omissions concerning Monco's and CBIC's financial condition and that these frauds induced BNO's loans. Notwithstanding that BNO's fraud allegations included averments that Monco's audited financial statements were false and misleading, Arthur Young was not named as a defendant in the July 1, 1982 complaint.

In August, 1983, more than one year after BNO's complaint was filed, BNO contacted Arthur Young expressing a fear that prescription (Louisiana's term for the statute of limitations) on possible claims by BNO against Arthur Young was about to expire.[1] BNO told Arthur Young, however, it did not wish to sue Arthur Young and therefore asked for an agreement concerning the interruption of prescription as to Arthur Young. BNO and Arthur Young thereafter agreed that any subsequent action brought by BNO against Arthur Young would be deemed filed as of August 10, 1983. The agreement was drafted in such a manner that any claim which had expired by August 10, 1983 would not be revived.

1 There is no dispute that the applicable period of prescription to BNO's negligence claim against Arthur Young is one year.

Notwithstanding BNO's claim that it did not want to sue Arthur Young, on May 31, 1984[2] BNO filed its Third Amending Complaint adding Arthur Young. Unlike the original allegations against Monco and Montagnet, which asserted fraud-based securities claims, the new allegations against Arthur Young only asserted that Arthur Young had negligently audited Monco's 1980 financial statements inter alia, by failing to disclose CBIC's then existing insolvency.[3] BNO further alleged that it reasonably relied upon the 1980 Monco financial statements in making the November, 1981 and January, 1982 loans. The complaint's prayer averred that Arthur Young was liable as an additional defendant in solido (Louisiana's peculiar form of joint and several liability derived from the civil law) for losses BNO incurred as a result of its loan to Monco.[4]

2 By the contractual agreement between Arthur Young and BNO the complaint was deemed filed August 10, 1983. This petition does not raise the Fifth Circuit's absolute disregard of this contractual agreement, which, on its face, precluded a finding of interruption of prescription as to Arthur Young on any other date.

3 The claimed basis of jurisdiction was that Arthur Young was a pendent party.

4 There was no allegation that at any time after Arthur Young's audit Arthur Young knew of Monco's and BNO's relationship, of the BNO-Monco loan, that Monco would apply for a loan, or that Monco would use the audited financial statements in connection with any such application. Nor was Arthur Young alleged to have aided and abetted, conspired, or acted with Monco in connection with the sale of any security. Indeed, BNO and Monco had not even met when Arthur Young conducted its audit.

II.

THE DISTRICT COURT'S GRANT OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND THE COURT OF APPEALS' REVERSAL

Arthur Young moved for summary judgment on the ground that BNO's negligence claim against Arthur Young was prescribed under Louisiana's one-year statute of limitations. In granting Arthur Young's motion, the district court held that BNO had actual or constructive notice of a potential claim against Arthur Young more than one year before the date any action against Arthur Young was deemed filed by the parties' agreement, August 10, 1983. The district court also rejected BNO's argument -- not pleaded in its complaint and raised for the first time in its opposition to summary judgment -- that Arthur Young's alleged solidary liability under Louisiana law with Monco and Montagnet, who were timely sued, interrupted prescription. (A.4a-5a)

The Fifth Circuit reversed, although not because there was any factual dispute of BNO's knowledge of a claim against Arthur Young more than one year before suit. Rather, it held that prescription was interrupted because "BNO . . . properly alleged that [Arthur Young] is liable in solido" with Monco and Montagnet, who were timely sued.[5] (A.19a) (emphasis added) The Fifth Circuit

5 BNO alleged, and the Fifth Circuit accepted, that in Louisiana if a party is solidarily liable, prescription is interrupted once any party who is solidarily liable is timely sued. Thus, a solidarily liable defendant who is not sued until ten years after an action is commenced and nine years after prescription ran out, can still be added to a timely filed suit against another even if the plaintiff knew of the claim against the newly added defendant before the further rejected Arthur Young's argument that BNO failed to satisfy its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) to offer affirmative evidence (beyond conclusory assertions and pleading allegations) of solidary liability or concurrent fault under Louisiana law and to designate specific facts showing a genuine material issue for trial as required by the Federal Rules and the local court rules.

The Fifth Circuit stated that upon trial "in the district court BNO must prove that Arthur Young's negligence played a part in causing its loss on the Monco loan," but that Arthur Young's "assertions that BNO must prove solidary liability at the summary judgment stage erroneously would impose a burden on BNO to prove its negligence case before trial." (A.10a) In holding that to defeat summary judgment BNO did not have to offer any evidence in support of its theory, the Fifth Circuit criticized Arthur Young for "failure" to "submit or argue facts which showed that it did not conduct the audit . . . or that BNO did not rely on the audit. . . . " Id. Although BNO's opposition to Arthur Young's motion was based merely on unsupported pleading allegations of solidary liability, the Fifth Circuit panel nonetheless found that BNO had sustained its summary judgment burden.[6] (A. 2a, 10a, 19a) period of prescription expired. This rule of law is not challenged on this petition.

6 The case was remanded for further proceedings on BNO's claim against AY. In the interim, BNO settled with Monco and Montagnet and the remaining portion of BNO's suit was dismissed. Thus, but for the Fifth Circuit's erroneous reversal, this case was concluded.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

In assessing the importance of summary motions to litigation practice and procedure, it is essential to focus on the enormous and overwhelming number of lawsuits being filed in federal and state courts. In 1986, over 254,828 lawsuits were filed in the federal courts -- a 41% increase since 1981; during the period 1978 to 1983, 12,000,000 lawsuits (an average of 2,000,000 a year) were filed in state courts. Bacus, Liability: Trying Times, NATION'S BUSINESS, February 1986 at 24. With this ever-increasing number of lawsuits, it is fundamental that litigants -- whether they be plaintiffs or defendants -- be able to obtain a fair and, if at all possible, timely and inexpensive determination of their claims. Thus, parties must be able to dispose of unsubstantiated claims by summary means, where appropriate.

To this end, this Court has recently and unequivocably declared that motions for summary judgment are an integral part of the Federal Rules designed to promote such an expeditious and just determination of an action. To the extent the lower courts do not properly apply the provisions of Rule 56 and the teachings of this Court, it adds to the court congestion, wastes the limited resources of both the courts and litigants already sorely taxed by the growing volume of cases, and deters, not furthers, the interest of justice.

In acknowledging the beneficial purposes to be served through the appropriate use of summary motions, this Court specifically addressed the right of a defendant in accordance with Rule 56 to have factually insufficient claims dismissed, thereby avoiding an unwarranted and unnecessary trial. While purporting to follow this Court's admonitions, the decision of the Fifth Circuit panel rejects fundamental holdings of this Court by erroneously ruling that (1) a non-movant has met its burden of coming forward with proof in support of its claim by simply relying on allegations contained in its pleadings and (2) a movant must come forward with evidence negating a non-movant's allegations. By its decision, this panel of the Fifth Circuit has sent an inappropriate and ill-considered message to the lower federal courts concerning the use of summary motions. Its clear failure to follow this Court's recent controlling decisions should be reversed lest the message of those decisions be diluted or eroded by the lower courts, the salutary purpose of Rule 56 be lost, and the already overburdened court system be further clogged with cases which do not belong there any longer.

I

THE APPLICABLE STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This Court recently enunciated clear standards to be applied in determining motions for summary judgment. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). In adopting these standards, this Court emphasized that "[s]ummary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.' " Celotex, 106 S. Ct. at 2555 (citations omitted). With these considerations in mind, this Court specifically ruled that "Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Id at 2552-2553. Moreover, the nonmoving party who bears such burden is required "to go beyond the pleadings and by . . .[its] own affidavits, or by the 'depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file' designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.' " Id. at 2553; Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). "[T]he burden on the moving party may be discharged by 'showing' -- that is, pointing out to the District Court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id. at 2554. Thus applied, Rule 56 gives "due regard" for the rights of defendants to be relieved "prior to trial, . . . [of] claims . . . hav[ing] no factual basis." Id. at 2555.

Further, the burden on the non-movant to come forward with some evidence is not met if such proof is "merely colorable or is not significantly probative." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 106 S. Ct. at 2511. The non-movant can defeat summary judgment only if sufficient proof is adduced so that a jury, applying the substantive evidentiary standard of proof concerning the claim at issue, could reasonably find in that party's favor. Id. at 2512. "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient." Id.

The trilogy of cases, particularly Celotex and Anderson, has been properly interpreted by the commentators as a clear signal to the lower courts to be "less chary of granting summary judgment" in the appropriate case. E.g., Sayler, Rule 56: Proposals for an Underused Rule, ADR AND THE COURTS: A MANUAL FOR JUDGES AND LAWYERS, 313, 325-26 (1987). If that is what this Court intended, then given the rising tide of litigation, appropriate reinforcement must occur when the lower courts ignore this Court's directive or misapply the Rule in a manner which threatens to return to an era in which the Rule's salutary benefits of pre-trial disposition were not realized. The need for forceful re-emphasis of this Court's mandate is particularly necessary when, as here, a district court properly applies the Rule only to be reversed by a Court of Appeals' decision that conflicts so plainly with the Rule's literal language and this Court's recent holdings. Otherwise, such prior decisions were for naught.

II

THE FIFTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION CONFLICTS WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT

A. The Fifth Circuit Improperly Held That BNO Met its Burden of Coming Forward With Proof Merely by Relying on Allegations in its Pleadings.

Arthur Young met its burden under Rule 56 when it established that on the very face of the pleading filed in 1984 (and deemed filed in 1983) the period of prescription had expired more than one year before on a claim involving Arthur Young's 1980 audit. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b) authorizing a defendant to move "without supporting affidavits." This was further supplemented with undisputed record evidence of BNO's knowledge of a claim more than one year prior to the filing of the amended complaint. At this point, unless BNO offered some reason why prescription had not expired, the action was over. Accordingly, BNO advanced as its justification to overcome the bar apparent on the face of its pleading the theory that Arthur Young was liable in solido with Monco and Montagnet. However, this theory for preserving BNO's claim notwithstanding the obvious prescription bar depends on the linchpin of all the defendants being liable in solido.

BNO had the burden of proof concerning its theory of solidarity for two reasons. Solidarity is never to be presumed and the burden of proof is on the party claiming its existence. La. Civil Code, Art. 2093 (now Art. 1796). "[I]t is not sufficient to claim solidary obligation; it must be proved." Hilbun v. Goldberg, 823 F.2d 881, 884 (5th Cir. 1987).[7] Further, when, as here, a party relies on a theory to toll or interrupt the statute of limitations, that party has the burden of pleading and proving that theory and the evidence to support it. E.g., Moor v. Travelers Ins. Co., 784 F.2d 632, 633 (5th Cir. 1986); United Klans of America v. McGovern, 621 F.2d 152, 153 (5th Cir. 1980).

BNO's theory of solidary liability was that the alleged fraud of Monco and Montagnet concurred with the alleged negligence of Arthur Young to cause BNO's loss. (A.12a, 15a) Rule 56(e), Celotex and Anderson thus required that in opposing Arthur Young's motion BNO had to do more than rest on its pleadings to prevail on its claim of solidarity or the applicability of its prescription-interruption argument.[8] BNO needed to present sufficient evidence upon which a jury reasonably could find

7 One day prior to the Fifth Circuit's decision here, a different panel of the Fifth Circuit addressed in Hilbun the identical issue of prescription under Louisiana law and affirmed judgment for the defendants.

8 Other Fifth Circuit panels would agree that the non-movant has the burden to come forward with evidence and that summary judgment must follow if no such showing is made. E.g., Slaughter v. Allstate Ins. Co., 803 F.2d 857, 860 (5th Cir. 1986); Fontenot v. Upjohn, 780 F.2d 1190, 1195-96 (5th Cir. 1986).

that Arthur Young was solidarily liable with the defendants sued in 1982, i.e., BNO's loss was caused by the concurring tortious acts of Arthur Young and those defendants.[9]

There was not, however, a scintilla of proof submitted on any aspect of its solidary theory by BNO. Despite full and adequate discovery during the two years prior to Arthur Young's motion, BNO filed no affidavits, depositions, interrogatory answers or admissions to support its allegations of fault by Arthur Young, fraud by the other defendants, or any concurrence between them giving rise to any theory of solidarity. Indeed, contrary to the statement of material facts required by the district court's Local Rule 3.10,[10] BNO's statement failed to identify even a single issue of disputed fact or proof; it merely recited three brief unsupported legal conclusions -- only one of which even related in a vague way to the issue of solidary liability. (A.23a) The absence of any proof by BNO whatsoever in support of its solidary liability theory was ignored by the Fifth Circuit, however, because it erroneously concluded that BNO satisfied its

9 For example, BNO had to offer at least some proof of the following matters: (1) the alleged fraud of Monco and Montagnet, i.e., their false statements or omissions, their intent to deceive, BNO's reliance and damage; (2) Arthur Young's negligence, i.e., failure to conduct its audit in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards resulting in a set of inaccurate financial statements, proximate causation, and damage; (3) a duty owed to it despite the fact it was not Arthur Young's client; and (4) how these independent alleged tortious acts of Arthur Young and Monco and Montagnet concurred or coalesced to cause its loss.

10 Eastern District of Louisiana Local Rule 3.10 is set forth in the Appendix at A.21a.

burden merely by alleging the theory in its pleadings. (A.10a) In the view of the Fifth Circuit panel, to require more of BNO would unnecessarily "impose a burden on BNO to prove its negligence case before trial." (A.10a)

The Fifth Circuit's holding squarely conflicts with this Court's holdings in Celotex and Anderson, and the plain language of Rule 56(e) requiring that summary judgment "shall" be granted unless the non-movant makes the very evidentiary showing the Fifth Circuit panel dispensed entirely with here. This case thus presents a clear framework for relief by certiorari.

The issue is simply whether a non-moving party can prevail without submitting any evidence whatsoever; it does not involve issues of whether evidence as submitted is sufficient to create a triable factual dispute.

B. The Fifth Circuit Improperly Shifted the Summary Judgment Burden to Arthur Young.

The decision below not only failed to hold BNO to the appropriate standard of Rule 56 as enunciated in Celotex and Anderson, but imposed a requirement on Arthur Young to negate the factual allegations contained in BNO's complaint. Rather than focusing on BNO's complete failure to present any evidence to support its claims, the panel noted that "Arthur Young did not submit or argue facts which showed that it did not conduct the audit in question or that BNO did not rely on the audit in extending the loan." (A.10a) In so ruling, the Fifth Circuit reached a result at odds with this Court's recent rulings and the mandate of Rule 56.

When BNO invoked the theory of solidary obligation to toll or interrupt prescription (in lieu of the parties' contractual agreement on prescription), it assumed the burden of producing evidence to prove both the solidary obligation and the tolling or interruption of the statute of limitations. BNO's burden of proof was not removed merely because of Arthur Young's motion for summary judgment. As Arthur Young asserted before the Fifth Circuit, BNO was required to show, for example, a "relationship between Arthur Young and BNO" or the "falsity of Arthur Young's representations. . . .", i.e., BNO was required to produce some evidence to support its claim that the obligations of Arthur Young and the other defendants were solidary and thus tolled the statute. However, by its ruling, the Fifth Circuit created the bizarre situation that, merely by bringing its motion, Arthur Young became obligated to disprove what had been BNO's burden to prove. Such a result obviously is improper.

In Celotex this Court stated that "we find no express or implied requirement in Rule 56 that the moving party support its motion with affidavits or other similar materials negating the opponent's claim." 106 S. Ct. at 2553 (emphasis not added) Celotex specifically held that a movant carried its burden on an issue on which the non-movant bears the burden, simply by pointing out the absence of any evidence supporting the non-movant. Id. at 2554; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b). As BNO failed to produce any evidence supporting its claims and its theory of prescription interruption, the entry of summary judgment was mandated.

CONCLUSION

"One of the principal purposes of the summary judgment rule is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses and we think it should be interpreted in a way that allows it to accomplish this purpose." Celotex, 106 S.Ct. at 2553. This was thwarted in the instant case by the Fifth Circuit. Petitioner respectfully urges this Court to address the appropriate development of the standards for summary judgment and the improper erosion of this Court's recent holdings strengthening use of Rule 56. By reviewing and correcting the Fifth Circuit's clear disregard of the straightforward mandate of Rule 56 and this Court's holdings in Celotex and Anderson, the integrity and effectiveness of the most important pre-trial tool to clear congested court dockets can be preserved and reinforced.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

Before CLARK, Chief Judge,
BROWN, and JOHNSON, Circuit Judges.

CLARK, Chief Judge:

The Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company (BNO) appeals from the district court's summary judgment dismissing its negligence claim against Arthur Young & Company (Arthur Young) on the ground that the claim was prescribed under Louisiana's one-year statute of limitations governing negligence actions. Finding that BNO has properly alleged that Arthur Young is liable to BNO in solido with other defendants who were timely sued, we hold that litigation against those defendants interrupted prescription under Louisiana law. We reverse the district court's judgment and remand for further proceedings on BNO's claim against Arthur Young.

I.

Arthur Young conducted an independent audit of Monco Agency, Inc. (Monco) and its subsidiary Cotton Belt Insurance Company (CBIC) for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1980. Monco was a holding company, and CBIC was in the bail bond and surety business. Arthur Young's 1980 financial statements showed that Monco and CBIC were solvent companies. BNO asserted before the district court that it relied on this audit report as well as in house reports representing the corporations' subsequent financial condition in extending a loan in November 1981 to Monco for over $1.6 million. BNO extended an additional loan of $500,000 to Monco in January 1982. To secure payment of these loans, Monco pledged shares of CBIC stock.

The Monco loan went into default in March 1982. By July 1982, CBIC had been adjudicated insolvent in Texas, placed in receivership in Tennessee, and faced similar measures in California as well as in other states. BNO officers met with CBIC's appointed receiver in Tennessee (CBIC's state of incorporation) who informed them that CBIC had bail bond losses estimated at $13 million. The BNO officers were also told that many of the outstanding bail bond claims were "old," dating back to February 1979.

BNO filed suit against Monco and its president and principal shareholder Oliver Montagnet on July 1, 1982, approximately three and one half-months after it first learned of CBIC's difficulties and had reason to be concerned over the Monco loan. BNO alleged violations of federal securities laws[1] and the Louisiana Blue Sky Laws[2] on the ground that it had extended loans in excess of $2.1 million to Monco in reliance on Monco's and Montagnet's misstatements and omissions of material fact concerning the operations of Monco's wholly owned subsidiary CBIC.

In August 1983, BNO and Arthur Young negotiated an agreement whereby any subsequent action brought by BNO against Arthur Young in connection with the 1980 audit report would be deemed filed as of August 10, 1983. BNO filed a third amended complaint in May 1984 naming Arthur Young as an additional defendant and seeking to hold Arthur Young liable in solido for its losses as a result of the Monco loan. BNO alleged that Arthur

1 BNO alleged violations of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa, including Rule 10b-5, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5, as well as § 12(2) and § 17(a) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. § 77q(a). The district court dismissed the securities fraud claim based on § 17(a) of the 1933 Act at the outset.

2 BNO alleged violations under the former La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 51.715, which was amended in 1985. See La.Rev.Stat.Ann. § 51.714 (West Supp. 1987). The Louisiana Blue Sky Law is now simply entitled "Louisiana Securities Law." See La.Rev.Stat.Ann. §§ 51.701-24 (West Supp. 1987)

Young was negligent in failing to conduct the 1980 audit in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, which would have revealed that CBIC was in financial difficulty arising out of its bail bond activities in several states. BNO alleged that CBIC was in fact insolvent as of December 31, 1980, contrary to Arthur Young's 1980 audit report. BNO further alleged that it relied on Arthur Young's financial statements as well as Monco's in-house reports in extending over $2.1 million in loans to Monco.

Arthur Young moved for summary judgment, arguing that BNO's professional malpractice claim was prescribed under Louisiana's one year statute of limitations for such a claim. See La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3492 (West Supp. 1987).[3] Arthur Young asserted that BNO knew or should have known of a potential negligence claim against Arthur Young on the basis of misleading or false information in the 1980 audit report over a year before the stipulated filing date of BNO's action against Arthur Young. BNO responded that it did not have constructive or actual knowledge of a potential claim against Arthur Young arising from the 1980 audit until early 1983. BNO also asserted that it was seeking to hold Arthur Young liable in solido with Monco and Montagnet, and that timely suit against those defendants interrupted prescription as to Arthur Young. The district court agreed with Arthur Young that BNO had constructive knowledge of a potential negligence claim before August 10, 1982. The court also held that prescription was not interrupted on the basis of in solido liability.

II.

BNO makes the two arguments on appeal which it urged before the district court: 1) since it seeks to hold Arthur Young liable in solido with other defendants who were timely sued, prescription was interrupted; and 2) it did not have actual or constructive knowledge of a potential claim against Arthur Young until after August 10, 1982.

Arthur Young raises three arguments against interrupting prescription on the basis of in solido liability. First, Arthur Young contends that the August 1983 prescription agreement between BNO and Arthur Young precludes a finding of interruption on the basis of BNO's timely July 1982 suit since BNO expressly agreed to deem August 10, 1983 as the filing date. Second, Arthur Young contends BNO's position that timely suit against alleged solidary obligors interrupted prescription was not properly raised in the pleadings in the district court. And third, Arthur Young claims that solidary liability is not available as a matter of law in this case.

The August 1983 prescription agreement provides in pertinent part:

> In consideration of foregoing the filing of suit at this time by the Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company, Arthur Young & Company agrees to treat any action brought by or on behalf of the Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company > or its successor in interest, First National Bank of Commerce, in connection with Arthur Young & Company's audit of and report of the consolidated financial statements of Monco Agency, Inc. for the period ended December 31, 1980, as having been brought as of August 10, 1983. . . .

Arthur Young argues that the wording of this agreement is unambiguous, that any suit brought by BNO in connection with Arthur Young's 1980 audit of Monco would be treated "as having been brought as of August 10, 1983." Arthur Young contends that this agreement supercedes BNO's attempt to append an exception that prescription was interrupted by the filing of an earlier, timely suit against solidary obligors. Arthur Young further submits that Louisiana law supports the enforcement of parties' agreements concerning prescription. See, e.g., McDermott, Inc. v. M-Electric & Construction Co., 496 So.2d 1105, 1111-12 (La. Ct. App.1986) (upholding agreement shortening the applicable prescriptive period).

Arthur Young's reliance on Louisiana case law in this instance is unavailing. The agreement in the case at bar does not identify the applicable prescriptive period. The agreement merely stipulates the date at which a lawsuit brought by BNO against Arthur Young in connection with its 1980 audit would be deemed filed. When BNO added Arthur Young as a defendant to its lawsuit against Monco and Montagnet in May 1984, the agreement treated the addition as if it had been made on August 10, 1983. That is the entire sum and substance of the agreement. It does not discuss or consider the effect of the earlier timely lawsuit alleging fraud on the part of Monco and Montagnet. It does not purport to restrict

BEST AVA

BNO's ability to allege Arthur Young's in solido liability with these defendants.

B.

Arthur Young contends that BNO is precluded from asserting its solidary liability interruption theory because it did not plead it before the district court. In particular, Arthur Young claims that the one-year statute of limitations with respect to BNO's negligence claim had run on its face, since the alleged negligent audit took place in 1980 and the complaint was not filed until August 1983. To overcome this patent deficiency in pleading, Arthur Young asserts, BNO was required to allege with specificity its position that prescription was interrupted by the timely June 1982 filing.

BNO did, in fact plead Arthur Young's solidary liability in the third amended complaint's prayer for relief:

> WHEREFORE, plaintiff, The Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company, prays:
> (A) For judgment . . . in favor of plaintiff, First National Bank of Commerce, and against defendants, (Monco, Montagnet and others) and Arthur Young and Company, jointly, severally, and in solido rescinding plaintiff's purchase of securities alleged herein and awarding plaintiff, on account of said recission [sic], the sum of $2,138,111.10. . . . [emphasis added]

BNO repeated this allegation of solidary liability in the following paragraph (B), stating an alternative theory of recovery.

ILABLE COPY

Arthur Young submits that this pleading is deficient since a prayer for relief is not a part of the cause of action itself and does not supplement the facts alleged in the body of the complaint. See, e.g., WiCO Corp. v. Willis Industries, 567 F. Supp. 352, 355 (N.D. Ill. 1983). This is wrong on two counts. First, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are based on the concept of "notice pleadings." See Wright & Miller, 5 Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1202 (1969). Technicalities and pleading niceties give way to substance. Fed.R.Civ.P. 1 and 8(a). Second, Arthur Young's position ignores the fact that BNO's prayer for relief is a product of the facts alleged in preceding paragraphs. The omission of the words "solidary liability" in the part of the complaint which addressed Arthur Young's role in BNO's extension of credit to Monco and the resulting monetary loss did not detract from the overall thrust of the allegations. The facts alleged in the body of the complaint combined with the specific allegation of solidary liability in the prayer for relief were sufficient to put the court and Arthur Young on notice that BNO was seeking to hold Arthur Young liable in solido with Monco and Montagnet.

If BNO had failed to expressly plead its prescription interruption theory in specific terms in the third amended complaint it would not be precluded from asserting its claim before the district court. Arthur Young relies on Mann v. Adams Realty Co., 556 F.2d 288 (5th Cir. 1977), for the proposition that a complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted if it shows on its face that prescription has run. Mann recognizes that a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6), is an appropriate method for raising the affirmative defense of prescription. Mann, 556 F.2d at 293. This case, however, does not represent a Rule 12(b)(6) issue. Arthur Young did not even move for a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal.[4] If it had, the parties could have addressed the prescription issue in that context. However, the factual issue as to when BNO had constructive knowledge of a potential claim against Arthur Young was not one that could be readily resolved at that stage of the proceedings. Indeed, this very issue was contested through the discovery process for over two years before the district court's summary judgment in favor of Arthur Young. No procedural impediment precluded the district court from further considering BNO's alternative argument--which BNO asserted in memoranda submitted in response to Arthur Young's motion for summary judgment--that prescription was interrupted on the basis of the earlier, timely suit filed against Arthur Young's alleged solidary obligors. The issue of interruption was expressly raised, the parties briefed and argued the issue before the district court, and that court decided the matter on the merits. The issue was properly raised below and preserved for review on appeal.

Alternatively, Arthur Young contends that BNO did not satisfy its burden under Fed.R.Civ.P. 56 of submitting evidence with respect to Arthur Young's concurrent fault and solidary liability at the summary judgment stage. Arthur Young submits that BNO was required to go "beyond the pleadings and . . . designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.' " Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2553, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986) (quoting Rule 56(e)).

4 Arthur Young did move for dismissal on jurisdictional grounds. Arthur Young also immediately raised a prescription defense, moving for summary judgment and/or judgment on the pleadings. Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c), a motion for judgment on the pleadings is treated as a summary judgment motion under Fed.R.Civ.P. 56.

Whether Arthur Young is liable in solido with the other defendants for BNO's loss is the ultimate issue in this case, and in the district court BNO must prove that Arthur Young's negligence played a part in causing its loss on the Monco loan. The focus of Arthur Young's summary judgment motion, however, was not factual liability. Arthur Young did not submit or argue facts which showed that it did not conduct the audit in question or that BNO did not rely on the audit in extending the loan. Arthur Young asserted instead that BNO's claim was prescribed on the basis of BNO's constructive knowledge of a potential claim before August 1982. BNO's position that prescription was interrupted was raised in response to Arthur Young's affirmative defense that the statute of limitations had run and was based on factual assertions in pleadings and memoranda.

BNO did not fail to sustain its summary judgment burden. It properly raised the argument that prescription was interrupted on the basis of the earlier, timely suit against Monco and Montagnet as alleged solidary obligors. Arthur Young argues, however, the BNO has failed to show a "relationship between Arthur Young and BNO" or the falsity of Arthur Young's representations in the 1980 audit. These assertions that BNO must prove solidary liability at the summary judgment stage erroneously would impose a burden on BNO to prove its negligence case before trial.

C.

BNO's challenge to the district court's holding that prescription was not interrupted claims that both Arthur Young and the defendants sued in July 1982 are liable to BNO for the same loss on the Monco loan and thus are liable in solido.

Arthur Young does not dispute the fact that the filing of suit against a solidary obligor interrupts prescription with regard to all other solidary obligors. See La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 2097, revised as La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 1799 (West Supp. 1987).[5] Rather, Arthur Young simply argues that it cannot be held solidarily liable as a matter of law.

Article 2324 of the Civil Code provides that "[p]ersons whose concurring fault has caused injury, death or loss to another are also answerable, in solido," La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 2324 (West Supp. 1987). In addition, article 2091, in effect at the time in question, provided "[t]here is an obligation in solido on the part of the debtors, when

5 Article 2097 provided:
A suit brought against one of the debtors in solido interrupts prescription with regard to all.
La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 2097. This article was in effect at the time BNO first brought suit against Monco and Montagnet as well as when it sought to join Arthur Young to that suit. Art. 2097 has since been revised:
The interruption of prescription against one solidary obligor is effective against all solidary obligors and their heirs.
La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 1799 (West Supp. 1987). Art. 1799 expands the old art. 2097 to give interruptive effect to acts other than the filing of suit. Suit was filed here, so the articles do not differ materially for our purposes.

they are all obliged to the same thing, so that each may be compelled for the whole. . . . " La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 2091.[6]

BNO's allegations before the district court satisfy either definition of solidary liability provided in the Civil Code. BNO alleged that Monco and Montagnet made false statements or omissions of material fact concerning the financial condition of Monco and CBIC in connection with loan negotiations in 1981 between Monco and BNO. In May of 1981, Arthur Young issued the audit report for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1980. BNO alleged that, had Arthur Young properly audited Monco and CBIC and issued financial statements reflecting the true financial condition of Monco and CBIC, the misstatements in Monco's in-house reports the following year could not have occurred; that Monco and Montagnet used the erroneous audit report to misrepresent Monco's and CBIC's financial condition in 1981; that it relied both on Arthur Young's report and the ensuing in-house reports, which combined to cause BNO's loss of over $2.1 million.

BNO asserts that the "concurring fault" of Monco, Montagnet, and Arthur Young caused this loss. All defendants are liable to BNO for the "same thing"--BNO's loss as a result of the Monco loan. Under BNO's theory of the case, all defendants are solidary obligors. Full

6 Old Article 2091 is now revised as new article 1794:
An obligation is solidary for the obligors when each obligor is liable for the whole performance. A performance rendered by one of the solidary obligors relieves the others of liability toward the obligee.
La.Civ. Code Ann. art. 1794 (West Supp. 1987). The revision does not change the law.

performance by one solidary obligor here would relieve the others of liability to BNO. See Billiot v. American Hospital Supply Corp., 721 F. 2d 512, 513-14 (5th cir. 1983) (applying articles 2324 and 2091, court finds that negligent physician and manufacturer of defectively designed product may be deemed solidary obligors for purposes of interrupting prescription).

Arthur Young counters that BNO's claims against Monco and Montagnet were based on federal and state securities laws and that BNO's claim against Arthur Young, conversely, is grounded on negligence under the Civil Code. Arthur Young contends that since federal law governs BNO's federal securities claims, there can be no solidary obligation under Louisiana law. Similarly, Arthur Young urges that Louisiana's Blue Sky statute is not a part of the Civil Code and that therefore the general solidary obligor provisions in the Civil Code do not encompass securities law violations. Arthur Young further reads the Louisiana Blue Sky statute, see La. Rev.Stat.Ann §51.714 (West Supp. 1987)[7] as limiting the class of wrongdoers who may be held liable for state securities violations.

Arthur Young has cited no authority for its position that BNO was required to sue the initial defendants under

7 Section 51.714 is a revision of old § 51.715, which was in effect at the time BNO sued Arthur Young. Section 51:715 provided:
B. Every person who directly or indirectly controls a seller liable under Subsection (A), every partner, officer, or director of such a seller, every person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions, every employee of such a seller who materially aids in the sale, and every broker-dealer or agent who materially aids in the sale are also liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as the seller. . . .

the Civil Code in order to interrupt prescription as to the negligence claim against it. There is no basis in logic or law for requiring that the source of liability be found in the Civil Code and sued upon pursuant to a specific codal authority before such liability may be deemed joint, several, or in solido with that of others. Indeed, La.Civ.Code Ann. art. 1797 (West 1987) provides: "An obligation may be solidary though it derives from a different source for each obligor." Moreover, the Louisiana Blue Sky Law does not exclude categories of persons as potential solidary obligors; rather, it provides that persons such as "general partners," and "officers" who control the defendant seller shall be "jointly and severally" liable. The Blue Sky Law merely provides a statutory cause of action for securities fraud. It does not effect the character of that fraud for purposes of classification under the Louisiana Civil Code.

Arthur Young contends that Monco and Montagnet and Arthur young are not "obligated to the same thing." Arthur Young submits that Monco and Montagnet were sued for rescission--in other words, to void the contract and recover the money BNO loaned to Monco in exchange for pledged CBIC stock--while Arthur Young was sued for mere negligence in preparing the 1980 audit. Arthur Young claims that since it was not a party to the loan transaction it could never be held liable for rescission, to void the Monco loan contract, or to return the consideration paid for the CBIC stock. Arthur Young misses the point. One thing BNO seeks is to recover damages sustained as a result of the Monco loan default. While different theories of recovery are asserted as to Monco and Montagnet, all defendants are allegedly obligated to the same thing insofar as recovery of the loan loss is concerned. Recovery of the loan loss damages against either Monco and Montagnet or Arthur Young under any theory would satisfy this common demand as to all defendants.

Arthur Young contends that solidary liability is not applicable because Monco and Montagnet were sued for fraud and Arthur Young was not. There is no impediment to holding one fraudulent defendant and one "merely" negligent defendant liable in solido when their concurrent fault has caused a single loss if they are obligated for the same thing. As this court observed in Equilease Corp. v. Smith International, Inc., 588 F.2d 919, 929 (5th Cir. 1979):

> Logically, a party may be held individually liable for negligence whether the damage caused to the plaintiff takes the form of fraud or bodily injury. And we perceive no impediment to binding a defendant who acts negligently in solido with those who commit an intentional tort when the same harm to the plaintiff results, provided, of course, that each party is legally at fault.

Here the same harm to BNO has resulted from BNO's asserted intentional fraud on the part of Monco and Montagnet and negligent accounting practices on the part of Arthur Young.

Arthur Young relies on the Louisiana Third Circuit's recent decision in Bertrand v. St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 491 So.2d 474 (La.App. 3d Cir.), cert. denied, 494 So. 2d 541, 543 (La.1986), in which the court rejected interruption of prescription of an action against an alleged solidary obligor in circumstances Arthur Young says are analogous to those in its case. In Bertrand, an action was brought to enjoin a hospital and physicians from destroying evidence surrounding the death of a patient. Following the date on which a medical malpractice action would have prescribed, the original complaint was amended to include malpractice claims against the original defendants and one additional physician, who was named for the first time. The state appellate court held that the amendment related back and thus exempted the plaintiff's claims against the originally named defendants from prescription; however, the court also held that the amendment did not relate back with respect to the physician named for the first time. The court rejected the argument that prescription was interrupted by the original action seeking injunctive relief against the physician's alleged solidary obligors.

Arthur Young submits that the Louisiana court refused to allow interruption as to this physician because "there was no pleading filed putting him on notice that some form of judicial relief was being sought arising from his participation in the events surrounding Bertrand's death, and putting him on notice that his evidence concerning it should be collected and preserved." Id. at 481. By analogy, Arthur Young contends that the fraud claims against Monco and Montagnet could not have put it on notice of a possible negligence action against it in regard to the 1980 audit.

Arthur Young's reliance on Bertrand to define sufficient notice with respect to Louisiana prescription is misplaced. Bertrand determined that the amendment adding a malpractice claim did not relate back so as to permit the claim against the newly named defendant. Solidary liability was not the issue. The Louisiana court refused to interrupt prescription because article 2097 required a timely suit against a solidary obligor to interrupt prescription as to another. In Bertrand, there never was a timely malpractice suit. The untimely malpractice amendment could not relate back to the earlier filed injunction action. The relief being sought in the initial action--preservation of evidence--did not demand the same thing--damages stemming from a patient's death due to medical malpractice. Arthur Young, on the other hand, knew or could have known from the date of the initial action that BNO was seeking to recover its loss on the Monco loan. Timely suit against an alleged solidary obligor which was jointly liable for that loss put Arthur Young "on notice" for purposes of interrupting prescription.

Arthur Young contends that its fault was not concurrent with that of Monco and Montagnet. Arthur Young asserts that fraudulent and negligent acts can never be concurrent under article 2324 of the Louisiana Civil Code. Article 3556 of the Louisiana Civil Code states that there are three degrees of fault: the gross, the slight, and the very slight. "The gross fault is that which proceeds from inexcusable negligence or ignorance; it is considered as nearly equal to fraud." La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3556. To equate fraud with negligence is to ignore these defined degrees of fault. This truism is immaterial in the present setting.

Article 2324 speaks of "concurring fault." It does not consider degrees of fault. Under this court's reasoning in Equilease fraud can concur with negligence:

> In Louisiana, the basis of all delictual recovery is fault. The notion of fault encompasses, besides the doing of an unlawful act, both the intentional harming of another (dolus) and the negligent harming of another (culpa). See Stone, Tort Doctrine in Louisiana:

The Concept of Fault, 27 Tul.L.Rev. 1, 8-13 (1952).

> True, imposing solidary liability on co-delinquents, when one has committed a willful harm and the other a negligent one, may lead to inequitable results if there is no apportionment of fault between the defendants. The one who is negligent is rarely equally at fault with the one who intends to harm. But the same inequity results when one tortfeasor is grossly negligent and the other is only slightly negligent. The remedy lies in regulating contribution rather than limiting the ambit of Article 2324.

588 F.2d at 929 n. 12. Similarly, we hold that article 2324 encompasses both fault that takes the form of willful harm and negligence. See Billiot, 721 F.2d at 513-14 (combining negligence and product liability is to the same effect).

Finally, Arthur Young makes reference to the ground on which the district court apparently determined that Arthur Young and the other defendants could not be solidary obligors: because Arthur Young could not be liable to Monco and Montagnet for contribution under the federal securities laws as joint tortfeasors. Again, Arthur Young advances a correct statement of law which has no applicability to the present issue. Monco and Montagnet as intentional tortfeasors could not seek contribution from Arthur Young as a negligent party. However, the determinative inquiry under the Louisiana Civil Code is not the right to contribution, but whether the concurring fault of all three defendants caused BNO's loss and whether all defendants are obligated to the same thing.

Arthur Young is clearly not liable for the alleged fraud, but BNO is not precluded from seeking to hold it responsible in solido for its role in conducting the allegedly improper audit which enabled Montagnet and Monco to perpetrate that fraud and allegedly concurred to cause BNO's loss.

III.

BNO has properly alleged that Arthur Young is liable in solido for its negligence in connection with the 1980 audit and representations of Monco's and CBIC's financial condition. The timely June 1982 suit against alleged solidary obligors Monco and Montagnet thus interrupted prescription with regard to Arthur Young. We hold only that prescription was interrupted as a matter of law. We express no opinion as to whether BNO had constructive knowledge of a potential claim against Arthur Young before August 10, 1983. Obviously, we express no view on the merits of the claims asserted. The district court's judgment dismissing BNO's claim against Arthur Young is

LOCAL RULE 3.10 STATEMENT OF
MATERIAL FACTS AS TO WHICH THERE EXISTS
A GENUINE ISSUE TO BE TRIED

NOW INTO COURT, through undersigned counsel, comes plaintiff, First National Bank of Commerce ("FNBC"), and, pursuant to Local Rule 3.10, submits the following statements of material fact at to which there exists a genuine issue to be tried:

1. Whether the acts and omissions of the individual defendants, in concert with the fault and negligence of AYC resulted in the $2.1 million loss by BNO.

2. Whether BNO's suspicions that the officers and directors of Monco Agency, Inc. ("Monco") had supplied false and misleading "in-house" financial statements to BNO should have put BNO on notice that the 1980 audit report issued by Arthur Young & Company, a "Big Eight" accounting firm, was false and materially misleading.

3. Whether, based on the facts then known to The Bank of New Orleans and Trust Company ("BNO"), BNO knew or had reasonable grounds to believe that the AYC audit report was materially misleading and inaccurate.
